Club Grubbery - Raw transcript of interview:

2024-09-02 - Graham and John speak with friends from the NZDSOS team

Hi everyone, Monday the 2nd of September we're recording this and it's been a frantic day here at this end, Johnny. I know you're having a frantic day as you prepare for uh, legal actions pending and all that sort of stuff. How are you traveling, mate? Yeah,

I'm alright, mate. Yeah, we're, we're getting, uh, Steve Kelly and Tony Nikolic have been hard at it with the, uh, with the barristers, so, yeah, just providing a bit of information here and there, and we've had some really bad winds the last, uh, day, so, uh, just sort of bunkering in for that.

Incredible

here, too. It's just blown a gale. Apparently 175 kilometers an hour in Melbourne, and they've told people not to come to work. It's that bad. Wow. Yeah. Yeah. It's almost like Daniel Andrews is breezed back into Melbourne again. It is. Yeah. He's on the golf course. It is. Yeah. But John, we're joined today by two lovely guests from New Zealand from NZD SOS, which is New Zealand doctors.

Speaking out with science.

Speaking out with science. Thank you. I should have done my research. We have Anna Pitley and Anna McLaughlin joining us and it's great to have you on ladies. How are you?

Thanks so much for having us. I'm doing well. Very good.

John.

Excellent. Now we're talking to you. We're going to be talking to you shortly about a couple of big conferences or events that you've got happening over there, which I'm really keen to talk about because I'm coming over to participate with you all and looking forward to that.

But before we go into that, let's find out what's been happening in New Zealand. Where are you guys at with NZDSOS and what's the climate like over there in relation to the government and mandates and all the other things that seem to be worked behind the scenes?

Well, Anna, do you want to go first or? Sure. Well, look, there's always something that's on our radar. Um, we usually are just going from one thing to the next. Um, in regard to the mandates, I think people would be surprised that even though officially, uh, the government mandates Uh, no longer in force.

There's definitely industries within New Zealand where um, it is recommended and that word might sound very soft, but it isn't soft. Recommended actually still requires, uh, the initial COVID, uh, vaccinations. And the industries, uh, which I'm referring to are still Still, the health and disability sector, so Te Whatu Ora, that's New Zealand's largest employer of health and disability workers in New Zealand, uh, they still, uh, require vaccination to a degree, although we certainly are in correspondence with, um, workers, nurses and some.

doctors that are able to work within the system in an unvaccinated status. But the defense forces are still requiring vaccination. But again, they're very clever. They say it's recommended and we can have it on good authority from individuals going through the processes to join the ranks of some of these government departments.

That, um, they cannot continue with their process, uh, until they're vaccinated. So that's very, that's very disturbing. Um, I think, you know, the majority of New Zealand believe that we're not under that dark veil anymore, but we absolutely are.

I think it's also pertinent to note that the universities are still requiring for some courses. That the students are fully vaccinated and boosted with the COVID vaccines. And it's pretty astounding when you really think about it because where is their freedom of choice? Where is the informed consent to be able to allow these people to make a decision for themselves that's taken away if they want to continue on their courses or if they want to actually apply?

Doesn't sound that much different to what's happening over here, John.

Nah, it's very similar, Hoody. Uh, we know that, uh, although they, they say they don't require it, recommends that soft word, isn't it? But, uh, ultimately they're, they're still being very, uh, discriminatory towards anyone that doesn't have it.

Uh, and anyone that didn't follow their orders, they're, uh, even more, uh, oppressive of, so it's, uh, yeah, it's, it's a similar theme, uh, Hoody. There's no doubt about it, but, uh, while the ladies are here, it's probably a good opportunity for them just to. Tell us a bit about themselves because I don't know club grab reviewers would be familiar with them.

I can't recall, uh, uh interviewing two annas before so That's a good idea. How remiss of me.

That is a bit remiss of you, Hooty. Normally you do that. I know, but I've been talking to them both for so long in the last few weeks. I keep thinking that they've been on.

My apologies, lady. John.

Totally fine. So, Anna McLaughlin, tell us about you.

Yeah, well, um, I joined NZDSOS, uh, in November of 2021, uh, when we were all being mandated out of things, uh, and I was working in communications and local government at the time and was kicked off site and all of that, all of those shenanigans, I guess, but basically I've been with the NZDSOS team ever since.

I absolutely love it. So I work behind the scenes. I'm not a doctor. I am a former spin doctor. And, um, I, yeah, I assist with the communications. We do the marketing, event management, and, um, Branding, social media, and emails and all of the things.

Everyone needs one of them hoodie. We need about 20 of them. We need about 20, but we've got one coming on board, Johnny.

So that's really good. So we're looking forward to Susie joining our team and Anna Petley. What about you?

Thank you. Well, actually, I started working with NZD SOS in 2021. Also, my position was mandated at a private hospital in New Zealand. I'm not a doctor. I'm a therapist. I was a day stay department coordinator at a Southern Cross Hospital in New Zealand.

And my job was terminated on the 15th of November 2021. I would be trespassed from the property if I returned on the Tuesday morning, uh, physically removed. So it was soon after that that I started working with NZDSOS. So I'm a part of the, um, media team. I look after our professional membership and just all those little coils and cogs that keep the wheels grinding in the background along with Anna McLaughlin.

Does she run it? Let's be honest.

So how many, how many people have signed up to your organization?

Well, we have over 260 in our membership, which considering the number of registered doctors in New Zealand is a pretty poor number. Look, we understand that, you know, raising your head above the parapet, the persecution, the censorship, um, it certainly cost a lot of livelihoods.

Um, the stresses have been intense. Um, so look, we understand and everyone's got their own personal dilemma to, uh, work through in regard to that. But definitely the doctors we work alongside and the ones that are out there. Working at grassroot level that aren't in our membership, they're definitely heroes, uh, speaking up for everybody in the face of this, um, nightmare that we've all been going through the past few years and is still continuing as well.

Indeed. I mean, it just never seems to end. It's like you wake up in the morning and wonder whether it's all just been a crazy dream.

Sure has. I question that every day.

Now, you've, you've been through a major election over there and there was a change of, of government. And I think a lot of people were, uh, were hoping for better outcomes of, of your hopes being realized.

Anna McLaughlin.

A lot of them actually have. And surprisingly, there's been an announcement recently that the phase two of the COVID inquiry with expanded terms of reference has, has failed. Um, happened. So that's going to be starting in November, which is actually really exciting because it does include vaccine harms and efficacy, which is something that our team particularly wanted to have included in that, um, in that scope and those terms of reference.

So it was quite exciting that that's been able to be initiated and then also put in place and followed through. So it's interesting to note that only 6 percent of people in our country voted for change, um, with these smaller parties, yet that 6 percent actually be, was able to help influence This code inquiry, but also influence the leadership of the nation.

And I think that's really, really important because in order to change and create change that's long lasting, you don't have to be this giant majority of people who are standing around and just doing nothing. You can have a small group of really committed individuals who stand up and speak out and are relentless in the pursuit of truth.

And I think that's really exciting.

Please. Anna Petley, we're hearing horrible stories about legislation being passed in New Zealand for medical practitioners to detain people who refuse to be vaccinated. And we're also hearing that, uh, that, uh, the police have the power to hold you down while you're forcibly vaccinated.

Is there any truth to this?

Well, look, the government put out their pandemic response, um, plan at the end of July. And certainly there's some very ominous language in there that lends itself to thinking that we are going to be in some sort of, uh, totalitarian control with, um, you know, the pandemic. These, um, directives that have been alluded to in the document, um, a medical officer, so whoever that individual may be, um, does have certain authority and rights to, um, seize property, for example, um, to authorize vaccinations in different situations.

So it's a 219 page document. It's pretty complex. And we actually have a very good post on our website, just knuckling that out, uh, for supporters to understand a bit better, but it's definitely got some very ominous Overtones alluding to the control that possibly could, um, be enforced. And so certainly there are some very legitimate concerns regarding that.

I think what we also have to realize though that those, this plan has actually been in place since 1956. So these, a lot of these, um, the points that were brought up in that document aren't new. The really concerning thing is, is though that they've been enacted in the last four years, four and a half years.

So that's something that has changed. But the powers. have been available to governments for a very, very long time.

John, it would be a brave government to actually enact and enforce those, uh, those restrictions and possibilities, uh, in the climate of, of, uh, the people of the world today who are becoming more sceptical every day.

Wouldn't you imagine?

Yeah. Well,

yeah, with monkey pops and the like, I mean, but it is happening. I mean, in Indonesia, they've now got, uh, things in place for monkey pox. So. Uh, look, people, people are still falling for this rubbish. There's no doubt about it. So who knows?

Yeah, it's quite unbelievable, isn't it?

Yeah. And another thing, because we're hearing, I'm just receiving news from the ABC here in Australia that the Senate report recommends compensation scheme for, uh, for people injured by vaccines. It's um, it's looking like they're wanting to extend it or reinstate it. So we're waiting to hear on other information regarding that.

But do you guys have a compensation scheme over there for the vaccine injured?

We do, uh, albeit it can be, um, definitely a bit of a trial to get your vaccine injury over the line. Uh, so for it to be seriously looked at. So ACC is our accident compensation, um, program in New Zealand. And certainly there have been some cases that have.

been approved. Um, just recently we were talking with an individual, uh, who, and it's taken nearly two years, uh, for this individual without giving away any confidentiality, uh, to get his case recognized. And it was turned down originally. And, uh, he pursued this and it's taken an awful amount of, uh, time.

time and resources and getting the right expert opinions to back up his medical history. And that is, seems to be the critical turning point, finding the right medical Expert, the specialist to actually put in writing and some might say it verbally but actually requiring it in writing to back up their claim.

And once that's in place, it holds a lot of weight and we have seen some get over the line to get compensated. Um, so certainly there's, there's some wins coming through. But the system is set up, uh, to work against people. People have to prove that they've been injured and, uh, the onus is on them, you know, and it's very difficult.

And a lot of the vaccine injured don't have, uh, the strength, the energy, uh, the resources to see this through. So a lot of them give up and it's a very frustrating experience.

Been a number of pivotal things that have happened throughout this four years. And I think one of those is. It's been Liz Gunn and her exposure of the whistleblower. Where's all that up to?

So currently those, uh, the court proceedings are still sort of in process and Barry is, uh, is going to be in court for the full hearing or trial in February of next year.

So it's sort of a waiting game really. But I saw the other day that the ministry of health has actually spent about 2 million on the prosecution of. Of Barry Young himself, which is pretty extensive, considering they're not actually analyzing the data, whether we have had a huge amount to do with the analysis of that data as it's still illegal to look at.

But, um, I think that if it's true, if it's not true, doesn't the public need to know you can remove any identifying information and just show people what they have behind the scenes. very much.

It's pretty compelling. Um, and apparently is the, is the. judicial system in New Zealand upholding its obligation to the people it serves, or is it, is it seeming rather one sided?

Is it hard to get cases across the line over there?

It's definitely one sided. There's the short answer. Uh, yeah. Um, going back a few years, of course, you know, right back to, um, the events at Wellington and Parliament, it's been, uh, proven since then and even prior. That, um, all of the judiciary is definitely within the firm grip of the government and, uh, for them to speak out or set a president, um, even though they might agree to some of our information.

Especially in regard to some of the doctors that have had cases, um, before the Medical Council of New Zealand, uh, the judiciary, uh, definitely appear to have their hands tied and, uh, no, we haven't been able to get too much over the line, unfortunately. And just recently, we did bring a case, with Fluoride Free New Zealand, uh, to court and the judge found against us, uh, NZD, SOS and Fluoride Free New Zealand saying that we were a minority group and, uh, the, the public interest, there was, wasn't, um, enough public interest in the case.

So they weren't, so they, you know, put the court costs to us. So, um, yeah, definitely hands are tied in the background there makes everything we're doing that much harder. But look, you know, we still continue our fight. We're standing up for truth, what we believe to be true. And we just got to hope that. You know, we've thrown a lifeline and these people have got a conscience and things are starting to crack.

Well, we hope so too, and we must keep forging on. Um, before we go on to the tour that's coming up in a couple of weeks, John, you got any other questions relating to the climate over there in New Zealand?

Well, look, I, I, I really feel for you with that, uh, fluoride business because You know, who do these courts think they are that they can just determine what the public interest is?

You know, I know, I know, say for instance, in the, in a case in Australia that was brought by Tony Nicolet, uh, the Kasem v Hazard matter, there was a hundred thousand people watching it online. Uh, they said it wasn't a matter of public interest. I mean, who determines this stuff? I mean, if channel seven, uh, or your TV in New Zealand were getting those sort of numbers in the morning, I think they'd be pretty happy.

No, they surely would, but it also seems to me, Johnny and ladies, that it's like both the governments across the Tasman are working out of the same playbook. I mean, it's almost identical what's going on. And I suppose we could say that about every other nation in the world that's in the midst of this. Um, it's just bizarre that this is so well coordinated.

I don't know whether you had the chance to watch it last night, the girls probably didn't Hootie, but on that spotlight program I watched the, uh, the thing about Boeing and the Max Jets. Now, if you can't draw a parallel to the pharmaceutical companies from what's going on at Boeing, it's like they've come out of the same playbook.

The whole thing is just corruption, um, and it's going on in nearly every sector, uh, whether it be pharmaceutical, aviation, it's going on everywhere and you know, it's, it's, it's a real scourge.

It really is. I've been, uh, I've been looking at a bit of stuff coming out of Blackrock. Uh, and they're a, they're a major, uh, investing house, of course, we know, we know the stuff that they're up to, but they're, uh, they're, uh, aptly named CEO, uh, I think it's Michael Flink.

Uh, Fink, yeah, that's his name. Um, he made it very clear in an interview on, I think it was CB, CNBC or something over in America that their big push, where they find the most profit is in infrastructure spending. Infrastructure investment and they're planning a whole bunch of, uh, flat pack cities that are going to going to be going up all over the place.

Um, a whole raft of other initiatives that they can see involving, um, public, public safety. And our public lives, they're, they're, they're heavily involved. And it just, it is so clear to say that BlackRock Vanguard, uh, and all these other organizations, they are our new government around the world. Because our, our global governments are powerless to deal with it, with any matter pertaining to them, because they hold the purse strings we've gone so far into their, into their debt that without them, we can fund, we can fund nothing.

We can fund nothing without BlackRock and Vanguard. We have to. Dance with them for everything that we need to construct here in Australia, New Zealand. And that's terrifying.

Yeah, well, our previous government, the Labour government here, they sold our power infrastructure to BlackRock, and so BlackRock's investing in green energy in New Zealand.

But you have to question, what is green energy? And what's the cost of it? To the environment as well.

Well, if it's their green energy plan, it's black energy. Um, you know, it's not, there's nothing green about it. It just spells doom and gloom for the rest of us. That's for sure. And I mean, we're also hearing out of Italy, uh, incredible reports that Um, from people on the ground in, in the Bay of Naples that they're swimming around in the water over there and they're seeing bubbles rising from the bottom and smelling sulfur on the surface of the water and scientists, uh, geoscientists in, uh, in Europe are predicting a massive volcanic eruption.

Probably centred around the Bay of Naples. It could take out 3 million people. Um, that's being covered by alternative media and by people on the ground, but you're not hearing about it in the mainstream. Now, if, if that happens, apart from, apart from the horrible loss of life that may ensue, but they, they see that, uh, that Europe is about to, in some cases explode.

Now, if that happens, um, all this greenhouse energy stuff is just going to go out the window. One big volcanic eruption and it's all. It all amounts to nothing. So, you know, once again, we're not hearing about what's going on, but, um, credible sources in Europe are saying that Europe's on the verge of a major explosion.

So who knows what's coming there? But anyway, we, we watch and wait and we pray that that doesn't happen. Now. I'm about ready to pack a bag with Michelle and we're coming over to the land of the long white cloud. And maybe you'd like to tell everyone why we're coming. Anna McLaughlin.

Yes. Well, we've got a really amazing conference coming up and on the 21st and the 28th of September and Christchurch in Auckland.

And we have some amazing speakers, including the wonderful hoodie here, who will be coming to host. Um, Yeah. And it's going to be a really fantastic day. We're going to do a one day event, um, and both locations.

That's wonderful. Anna Petley, who runs through the speakers list for us. It's, uh, it's a bit of a who's who over there at the moment.

I mean, me aside, I'm just being the MC, but some of the guest speakers are incredible names. Some have been on this program, of course.

Yes, indeed. You're probably familiar with most of them, all of them probably. So firstly, from our own NZD SOS team, we have Dr. Matt Shelton and Dr. Alison Goodwin. Both have been on your show, I believe.

We also have Dr. Emmanuel Garcia, commonly referred to as Nanny, a psychiatrist. So he'll be talking during the lunchtime hour. I mean, no, actually during the daytime is, um, as a keynote speaker as well. So we've got Katie Ashby Coppins, uh, lawyer. She'll be sharing a few legal stories with us and touching on GMOs, just understanding the relevance of that in regard to the vaccines and what that means.

Uh, we've got David Sheralumbus. Uh, he's a behavioral expert, uh, psychologist. So he, he's going to be very fascinating. Uh, I love listening to David. Uh, all of a sudden things just really start to make a bit of sense when you understand the depth of psychology and all of the tricks they've played on everyone.

So that's really fascinating. I'm sure everyone will love to hear that. And, you know, just see it for what it is, what's really happened. Mm-Hmm. , uh, professor Angus dle, uh, oncologist and immunologist from the uk, uh, who has been speaking out from the start of the covid vaccination and, uh, the red flags that were going up in regard to cancer with the, uh, SB 40 sequence that is in the vaccine.

And also the, uh, turbo cancers, people presenting at stage four, which was previously perhaps, uh, you know, quite rare, but now it's a regular occurrence. Um, he'll be talking about the spike protein and the damage that does, uh, to the body in regard to, uh, neurological, Disease and and clotting. So that will be incredibly fascinating as he shares all of his clinical expertise with us.

We also have Dr. Paul Merrick from the frontline critical care. Uh, network in the U. S., the founder of that, along with, um, Pierre Cory. So, another great hero, right from the early days, uh, he's going to discuss his experience of the past few years, and try and dissect that for us, so we can understand what happened over there, and, uh, his role.

And all of that, and the setting up of the, um, FLCCC protocols, which we know are used internationally, uh, across the world, um, to help with, uh, different, um, you know, well, we use them in our clinic here in New Zealand, actually, the NZDSOS clinic, we use them for our vaccine injured patients. So those protocols are very important.

And you, Hoddy. Of course, the lineup, uh, star of the day, just keeping everyone on cue and sharing your story as well, um, at the start, I'm going to be really fascinated to hear how you, um, you know, started club grubbery based on, you know, your experience, uh, being mandated as a Qantas pilot. So we're really excited.

And just on top of those, um, Awesome keynote speakers. We are utilizing the lunchtime hour. So we have the likes of Fluoride Free New Zealand with some talk time. Uh, we have a group called Re Envision New Zealand that have been working the past two years to bring a different platform, uh, to the current medical establishment.

Um, we've got an NZDSOS dentist speaking about his experience. Um, yeah, so we've got a great lineup. We're very excited to see everyone in person. We spend a lot of time at home looking at screens. So this is a totally different, um, yeah. It's going to be a wonderful in person experience for everyone. Great connection and collaboration.

Yeah, it's going to be great. We're looking forward to it. I want everyone in New Zealand to know that anything that I've done in Club Grubbery is all John Larder's fault. It's got nothing to do with me. It's all his fault. Um, he, he puts me out there. I cop all the flack and he just sits grinning in the background like he's doing right now.

It's not fair, but there's nothing I can do about it, but I'm, I can't wait to press the flesh if you like with some great Kiwis over there who've been following us for a long time. Now, what's, uh, Anna McLaughlin, what is, what's the theme of the, of the conference, uh, series?

Yeah, so the theme is Empowering Change, Methods, Motivation and Evidence.

We basically really want to, we want our delegates to go away with a sense of, The fact that they can actually empower change within their own lives and within their own communities and our collective voice as a whole has incredible impact to change legislation to change the way that people view things.

And it's about, um, having courageous conversations. So we've got David Sharalambis, who is a behavior, a human behavior expert in neuro linguistic programming. He's going to come and share some really practical tools of being able to have those conversations. Then we're going to use the evidence from say, um, Professor Dale Maric about the things that they've seen over the last.

And then we've got the motivation from our team and Katie Ashby Coppins and yourself who will just be encouraging people and the stand that they've had to make because I think over the last four years, particularly from what I've witnessed behind the scenes and various organizations, is that. The communication that has been presented to the public as is really disempowering, and people have had a lot of the authority taken away from their own decision making, and we really want to see that replaced over this conference time because I think it's really, really important that people go away with a sense of strength and encouragement.

Absolutely. It's going to be amazing, but it's a pretty full day. Anna Petley, uh, starting, I believe, I think I'm speaking at 8. 30 in the morning. Is that right?

Yeah. Are you going to be up by then?

No, he won't be up. Hang on, that's 10. 30 in the morning New Zealand time, so I should be up, yeah.

Okay. All good?

Yes. Eight 30, everyone seated, hopefully. And, uh, ready to start the day. It goes to eight, uh, five 30 in the afternoon, and then we have a separate ticketed event called the meet and greet. So that is, uh, when you get just a chat to the speakers, to yourself to N-Z-D-S-O-S members to fellow conference attendees.

Sort of talk about the day, um, and just really connect with everyone over a drink and a canapé if you wish. So just a social event, yeah, that'd be great to sort of network with everybody and hear their stories because during the day it is a full on schedule. And, uh, even though we have break times, um, you know, there's not often a lot of opportunity to really just relax and, and, and talk.

So that's the meet and greet.

That sounds pretty exhausting. I, you know, I'll, uh, yeah, I'm going to have my work cut out for me, I think, John. I hope there's a non alcoholic wine for you, buddy. Yeah, I'm sure there will be, mate. I'm sure there will be. I'm looking forward to it. Now, how do people get tickets?

Um, and, um, they need to get booking now, right, because it is a ticketed event. Tell us about the venues, uh, in Christchurch to start with, Anna McLaughlin. What's happening there?

Well, I might let Anna Pitley, she's the one who's on the ground in, um, the Christchurch, in the South Island, but, um, Wolfbrook Arena, so Anna.

Take it away.

Wow. The Wolf Brook Arena is in Christchurch. Uh, it's a very large space accommodate all our delegates for the day. Uh, it's five to 10 minutes from the CBD. So it's very central. Um, you were expecting a great crowd and, um, yeah, well last, based on last year's feedback, of course, everyone said, you know, you've got to come to the South Island.

So, uh, we've really extended ourselves this year, um, above and beyond. Uh, so we are in Auckland again, but we did add Christchurch on also. So we're certainly hoping for all our Southerners, um, To, to unite and, um, join us on conference day. I mean, there are a lot of different groups in the South Island, of course.

Uh, and you know, a day like this is very important as we collaborate and work out, uh, steps going forward as Anna alluded to, you know, the, our unity is our strength and, uh, these in person events are invaluable.

Well, come on, you South Islanders, uh, you've been, you've been supporting us. You've been commenting on all of our shows.

We love you. And we'd, uh, we'd love to catch up with you there. So. Get booked early, for goodness sake, book in early and make sure you have a ticket, because you're going to miss out if you don't, and it'll be a great shame, because I'm really looking forward to meeting you, as is Michelle, who'll be travelling with me, and um, and so, what about Auckland, Anna McLaughlin?

Yeah, so we've got the Dewdrop Event Center in Auckland, which is in Manukau. And it's just a hop, skip and a jump from the actual airport. So if anyone's wanting to fly out to Auckland, it's pretty good. Both days are fully catered, so you don't need to worry about food. That's sort of part of the price.

And, um, why it is the way it is, but yeah, it's going to be really cool. The dew drop event center used to be the Vodafone arena. So it's the same place, but with a different name and a different company. And, um, yeah, we're really excited. They can fit up to a thousand people. So we had about a thousand people last year.

Well, just over, I think, actually, in the end, um, and I think what people noticed about the day was that they were suddenly, after being so isolated for so long, um, were able to come together in a really positive context and a really happy day and be talking face to face, which is something that we don't get to do often enough.

These days. Is it going to be live streamed as well? Like they do that in Australia sometimes?

Yes, we will be live streaming the Auckland conference. We won't do both of them because it's sort of, it's easier just to do one for everybody ordering tickets. Um, the conferences will be the same structure on both days, so you will be getting the same content.

Discussions and they will, it's live stream. So if you check out our website at NZDSOS. com, and you'll be able to purchase either the Christchurch Auckland or live stream tickets.

To see, uh, Paul Merrick and, uh, Angus Dalgleish, uh, you know, Angus Dalgleish, say, uh, he's, he's so impressive, isn't he Hoodie? Uh, when we interviewed him, uh, you know, he, he is just absolutely amazing.

I mean, you, you don't even have to talk. He just, For 30 minutes, we were just awestruck by what he had to say. It was just facts, figures. He made sense. Uh, people really, really enjoy, uh, listening to him.

Well, professor of oncology at St. George's teaching hospital in London and, um, and such credibility. I mean, he's, he's probably trained more gone, uh, not gynecologists, but, um, sorry, oncologists in, in, uh, In the UK than anybody else and, uh, and they're all, they're all reporting to him and they're all telling him the same thing that things are going crazy.

What's going on here? Um, so, you know, his words are incredible and we look forward to hearing and I look forward to, uh, shaking his hand and getting to know him, especially Paul Merrick as well. So it just seems like a fantastic event. And, uh, we can't wait to get over there. So, uh, let's get it happening, everyone.

Coming

over, it's going to be fantastic.

Right, so we'll post a link to the event in, uh, in the comments section, in the description, rather. And we'll make sure that everyone knows about it. We'll keep mentioning it as much as we can. So, uh, I look forward to meeting so many of you over there. Uh, John's thinking about hiding in my luggage.

Which is good. I'll lock him away. I'll lock him away in there and, uh, and I'll be fine. customs would be on to that. Sorry? I'm sure the customs would be on to that. Well, as long as I let the air out of you before I pack you and inflate you again, when we get over there, it'll work out fine. All right. Any, any final issues that we need to discuss before we go?

It's pretty good. I was just wondering, perhaps, what, what are your, um, Sort of interest while you're in New Zealand, Hoodie, specific things that you'd like to do and see. Did you have anything on your to do list?

Well, Michelle has said to me, we've got to have a soak in a hot spring. We've done that over there before, and we're looking forward to that.

And I want to eat that great New Zealand fish by the bucket load, because I'm on a diet now that says I'm pescetarian. Okay. Uh, and, uh, it's all about fish and salad and vegetables and I can't wait because the, the produce in New Zealand is mind bogglingly, breathtaking. Uh, and, and as are the people, we just can't wait to meet the people.

So, um, really, really looking forward to it. And you guys as well, ? Yeah.

Yeah. Well we can. So

Paul, Brandon will be involved in it, won't he?

Yes. I'm sure he'll be there. I'm pretty sure he is coming.

He's going to

Auckland, I think he said he's getting a ticket for there as, as an attendee. Um, he was the MC last year, by the way.

Right. Yeah. Well, I've got some big, big, uh, big steps and big shoes to fill in that case.

Yeah.

Yeah. So I think we're doing an interview, uh, in the next few days with, um, with that radio show over there. And we look forward to that too. So. We normally close with a prayer, so if you don't mind, we'll bow our heads.

Lord, Father in heaven, we thank you, Lord, that, uh, there are people with, with the, with the wherewithal and the courage and strength. To mount events where we can discuss solutions and bringing our nations back together again, Father God, because we definitely need healing. We pray for these events. We pray for the organizers and we pray that they will be thoroughly well attended.

We look forward to joining our colleagues across the ditch as we seek truth and talk about solutions going forward. And we do this in Jesus name. Amen. Amen. Lovely guys. Uh, Johnny, you've often been heard to say. You just couldn't make this stuff up. You couldn't make this stuff up. Stay out of the trees.

Everyone. Don't forget if you love somebody and you haven't told them, give them a call. There's a lot of pretty distressed people out there and, um, they've got good reason to great many of them. And what you did yesterday got you to today. We're going to be fine. We still live in amazing countries, both sides of the, um, of the Tasman.

And, uh, we do have a future as long as we stick together and stay within our truth. Uh, Anna McLaughlin, Anna Petley from NZD SOS, so great to have you on the program. And we look forward to seeing you all again on Club Grubbery in the next couple of days. Bye for now. Thank you. Thank you.
