Club Grubbery - Raw transcript of interview:

2025-12-05 Graham and John speak with David A Hughes - Part 1 of 2

Club, grab time again. Thursday, the 4th of December. Johnny Larder. Great to have you back on mate.

Thanks mate. Great to, and uh, yeah, looking forward to this interview hoodie. It's gonna be good.

I think this promises to be a really good interview. I think we're gonna be breaking some ground we haven't broken before because we have joining us all the way from the UK where it's about eight in the morning.

As we record here, uh, David Hughes, who's an academic, who's written several books that, uh, or a couple of books that are very, very interesting titles and we wanna unpack that with him. Uh, today as you watch this, you're gonna have your eyes open, I'm sure. David, welcome to Club Grubby.

Thanks very much.

It's good to be with you And, uh, fresh out the shower here. Just had my morning coffee rearing to go.

Good on you. Well, by the time you're fired up, John, and I'll be sound asleep. Alright, well thank you for joining us. Um, you, you were referred to us by a mutual friend and, uh, unpacking your story is gonna be very, very interesting.

Um, you're an author of two books and the titles are absolutely stunning. I'll go through them. The first one is COVID-19. It's an ebook, uh, a psychological, uh, CPH 19 Psych Psychological Operations and the War for Technocracy. And the second one is Wall Street, the Nazis and the Crimes of the Deep State.

Um, this is gonna be a fascinating interview, but before we get into it, uh, David, just tell us a little bit about your life and what led you into this kind of research that's, uh, brought these books about.

Well, uh, I used to be an academic. Um, that's really all I ever wanted to be. Um, I was quite happily settled into an academic career.

I had already had my doubts about the official nine 11 narrative, and I published a peer reviewed paper in 2020 expressing those doubts for which the academic community worldwide thanked me with a volley of online attacks. Um, and then immediately after that, um, the lockdowns hit and the whole COVID nonsense began.

And as I watched that horror show unfold, uh, I became deeply, deeply uncomfortable with what I saw taking place. Um, I, uh, have a PhD in German studies. Um, I personally saw various, uh, parallels and continuities with 1930s Germany. Um, and I looked to the rest of academia thinking, okay, so where are the people really?

Standing up and challenging this. Uh, and as with the official nine 11 narrative, I basically didn't see anything. Uh, and I found this extremely problematic. Um, I found myself increasingly, uh, ostracized, uh, within the profession. So, for example, pre COVID, I didn't have any problem at all in. Getting onto the major international conferences on that circuit, uh, as soon as COVID hit and I was submitting, uh, proposals to give papers, uh, for example, challenging the official misinformation and disinformation narrative saying, how do we know what is disinformation?

Uh, none of those were accepted. And I realized, well, we've got a major problem here, uh, as a profession. Uh, it's not standing up to the tyranny at all. And so, uh, in September, 2024, uh, I chose to leave the profession, uh, and to, um, start working independently. Um, you have to be outside of the system, I guess, to, to challenge the narrative.

And for the last 18 months or so, um, I've been writing all kinds of articles, making presentations, giving interviews, et cetera, just doing what I can to share my knowledge, uh, to help people make sense of the madness.

You, you mentioned you were, you've been, uh, you've done German studies. What other academic fields were you, were you most involved in before all this?

Um, well my main one was actually international relations. I mean, the German studies was a long time ago now I got that PhD in, in, in 2006. But there were so few jobs in that field, um, that I tried a couple of other careers, including accountancy for a short while, but then came back into academia and retrained in the field of international relations.

And that's where I've done most of my teaching and, and research for the last 10 to 15 years. So I've always had an interest in global political economy, how power works at the highest levels, et cetera. And really what we've been seeing since 2020 have been tremendous, um, power shifts and power plays in the global political economy.

So it is of great interest to me.

Um, I'll throw to John for a question in a second. Uh, David, I just, I'm interested to, before we unpack some of the, some of the writings that you've done. Uh, I'm really interested to get your perspective on how things are playing out now. Do you think that the truth is actually surfacing at a faster rate than you would've expected?

Do you think people are waking up more now to what's going on?

I think since 2020, the, the rate of awakening, uh, in inverted comm has been faster than it's ever been. Um, typically, the perpetrators of these operations like to remain hidden and in the shadows, and to roll things out gradually and incrementally so that the public doesn't really notice, uh, what's happening.

Um, you can find that modus operandi described, for example, as a big new PKIs book from 1970. The Techtronic, uh, era. He's, he's quite open about this. But really what's happened since 2020 has been so enormous and so forceful. Um, and in some respects so in our faces that it's very difficult, if not impossible, um, for those with, with eyes to see, and ears to hear, uh, to ignore.

And so I do take heart from the fact that um, more and more people are starting to ask questions. More and more people are starting to see through things. And the good news from our perspective is that once you see these things, there's no unseeing them. You can't go back. So that means that our numbers are only growing over time.

Yeah. Um, Johnny, I saw a post today. It would appear that Vladimir Putin has kicked out the Rockefeller. Anything to do with Rockefeller out of, uh, out of Russia, uh, made a scathing report to the Parliament about, uh, the influence that Rockefellers have had in, uh, in Russia and indeed around the world. And maybe we can touch on some of that.

But, um, Johnny.

Yeah, David, it, it'd be interesting to, uh, get your thoughts on, I, I mean, I think everyone would agree that you're obviously an expert in, uh, German history and, uh, and what a Nazi is. Uh, we, we've had rallies and, uh, people have said, oh, you know, the Nazis have taken over it, and they've, you know, been a whole heap of division and police and political sort, uh, uh, interest in it all.

And we don't want the Nazis here. But I mean, the, the reality is the, the, these same people, uh, I mean we, we've referred to them as, uh, the behavior as Nazi, like in relation to COVID. These, these people have, in my opinion, I'd be interested to get yours as an expert in, in, in German history. These people, these bureaucrats, these, uh, these people in government, they've acted worse than, uh, the Nazis did, in my view.

Well, it's difficult, isn't it, to, to gauge between levels of horror. Um, I mean, the Nazis of course were guilty of the most horrendous, um, medical experiments, particularly in the camps. But when you look at the so-called vaccine rollout, which went into the arms of billions of people worldwide, and almost immediately, um, independent investigators who were looking under the microscope at the contents of the vials and at the blood work of people who had just taken these shots were finding all manner of things which shouldn't have been there.

Um, all kinds of, um, elements and metals, uh, in particular, um, structures, which apparently self-assembled. I mean, this is really alarming stuff. And so we know at a bare minimum. Those shots contained ingredients which were undisclosed and had no place in being there. So if that's the case, nobody could have given informed consent to what went into their arms.

So the way I look at this is as a global violation of the Nuremberg Code, and of course the Nuremberg Code, the whole point of it in 1948 was in response to the horrors of Nazi Germany and the medical experimentation. And so for that to be violated on, on a global scale tells us that we are in real trouble.

Um, and what's happening is on a scale beyond anything that Hitler or Stalin could have dreamed on, this is, this is global now. And this is deeply distressing. And in a sense that whole, um, rollout to me looks very much like some kind of. Worldwide experiment, whatever this stuff was. I think it was a, an an experiment to see how different groups responded to it.

And of course we know from the how bad is my batch research by Craig Part, Cooper and others, that there was enormous variability within the, within the batches. One in every 200 batches was significantly more harmful than the rest. And that can't be accidental. It can't be by bad manufacturing processes or whatever.

So what was this really all about? There was no sound medical rationale for trying to inject everyone. There was no sound ethical rationale. Something very, very dark was taking place. And of course all of that was prefaced by two years of psychological warfare on a scale we had never seen before to try to get as many people as possible to take this stuff.

So this is really horrific. Um, I don't know if it's possible to. To kind of take measurements and say who was worse? The, the Nazis or, or, or, or the people at the top of the global power pyramid today. But either way, it's very frightening.

I think. Uh, we did a, a, a lengthy, almost two hour interview with attorney from the States.

Aaron Siri. I'm sure you're aware of his work. Yeah. We spent, uh, we spent many hours watching some of the stuff that he's done. Uh, I watched nine hours of a deposition he did with, um, with Stanley, uh, Plotkin, Dr. Stanley Plotkin, the father of vaccines, godfather of vaccines. Now, he was admitting that, uh, they had experimented on, uh, on babies that were born in prison.

Uh, they were taken off their mothers, they'd experimented on people that were in mental asylums. Um, some of the experiments, he, he, he had been, uh, he'd, uh, experimented on almost, uh, 80, that he admitted, uh, uh, aborted fetuses. Some of this stuff is just as horrific as, you know, in many ways as what we heard come out of Nuremberg.

And uh, obviously that sort of stuff, I guess, through Operation Paperclip or whatever has, has come across from Europe after the war. And a lot of these things have been enacted, uh, under the guise of, uh, freedom in the USA and various other places.

That's right. And in my book, wall Street, the Nazis and the Crimes of the Deep State, the whole point of that book is to try to not only highlight the continuities and parallels between 1930s Nazi Germany and the West and beyond since 2020, but also to explain how we got from there to here.

And I traced the, the, the, the processes from the 1930s all the way through to the present and Operation Paperclip, of course, is, is one of the key. Elements along that journey. So after 1945, there was a, a dramatic failure really, of deification, uh, in, in Germany. Many, um, former Nazis within the space of a few years were back in very powerful, uh, positions, including most of the leading industrialists.

And meanwhile, um, some of the Nazis who had been responsible for some of the, the, the worst horrors and, and, and, and the experiments and and so on, were taken over to, um, the us, to Britain, to Canada and elsewhere. Um, and were put to use in, in a Cold War context. And this was often done. Um. Lander, Steinle, um, so that people wouldn't know what was happening.

But there are direct continuities and parallels from there, for example, to the horrific experiments of of MK Ultra. And in my other book, COVID-19 Psychological Operations and the War for Technocracy, one of the many things that I do in there is to show how certain techniques that were pioneered and developed through the MK Ultra Program were effectively rolled out against entire societies in 2020.

And so we have this, um, dreadful line of, of, of continuity that embodies all of the worst things. And it hasn't gone away and it wasn't defeated. And unfortunately, it's back with us again today.

There was an organization set up in the UK after the first World War to help to rehabilitate soldiers who had, um, uh, shell shock.

Um, I just saw something on that the other day and that, and that seems to have been the, at the forefront or at the very beginning of these psychological operations that we're experiencing now. Have you got any information on that?

I do. Um, it's all in chapter two of my COVID book. Um, the Tavi Tavistock Institute was, um, quick to pick up on the fact that soldiers who had experienced shell shock in World War I were more susceptible to psychological programming.

So this is very interesting because it gets you onto a century or more of shock techniques. So again, coming back to MK Ultra and the kind of use of electrodes to shock the mind, um, again, that the whole idea was if you could, they called it de patting, uh, in the 1950s. If you can use shock techniques to depa the mind.

You can almost erase what was there before and treat it as a blank slate to start writing new messages on. And so they would, for example, just play the same messaging over and over 24 7 for days at a time to see if it was possible to, um, reprogram people's minds in that way. But you can fast forward through time and coming back to the Tavistock Institute in the 1960s in particular, they were interested in applying shock techniques, not only to individuals as per the MK Ultra Program, but to groups and indeed even entire societies.

And so they took a great interest, uh, for example, in wars and disaster situations where the normal way of life had been dramatically shaken up. And was it possible under those circumstances to start applying certain techniques to. Influence the, um, the thought processes of entire populations. And then if you think about the work, for example, of Naomi Klein in her book, the Shock Doc Train, um, she talks about, for example, the coup in Chile in 1973 or about nine 11, or about Hurricane Katrina.

And all of these were examples of kind of shocks being inflicted in different ways, um, to large numbers of people, if not entire societies. And under each circumstance, uh, she argues it's possible to dramatically reconfigure the political economy of those societies. And so what do we see in 2020? And this is what I argue in my book.

It was a massive shock and awe. Event. I mean, for me, it was a, a military operation. Um, and people's normal routines were dramatically, uh, disrupted. Um, people were put into, um, states of isolation through the lockdowns, the lockdown itself being a, a, a prison term, and prisoners, of course put in isolation.

And many of the techniques for MK Ultra were tested on, on prisoners. And so you can trace this continuity over the course of a hundred years or so, based starting with the initial recognition about shell shock and vulnerability and susceptibility to reprogramming all the way through to what happened in 2020.

And I think that the shock and awe effects of the lockdown was just the beginning of a whole series of psychological operations that were played upon the public.

Hmm. What do you. I think, uh, that those operations were, were able to be seen by some people and not others. I mean, for instance, hoodie and I, you know, we, we've been very compliant our whole lives.

I'd say we, we've done the right thing as, as we, as we thought was a reasonable thing to do. But this, uh, just didn't pass the pub test for us. And I think there's so many people out there that, that are thinking, well, why did I, uh, why did I question this? And, and why are clinicians that should be trained to see this sort of stuff?

You would think psychiatrists, psychologists, uh, why clinically are they not standing up?

It's a good question, isn't it? Um, if you go back to the writings of Alder Huxley in, in the mid 20th century, um, he wrote that for whatever reason, um, we, we can't be sure, but about 20% of the population cannot be hypnotized.

And so as hard as the powers that be might try to use their psychological techniques, there will always be a certain segment that simply isn't susceptible. Um, and I mean, I have different theories about this. I mean, that they're more speculative really than, than evidence-based. But for example, I wonder if it has to do with the, um, amount of mainstream media that people consume.

Uh, 'cause the level of programming is, is higher there. Um, the Lockdowns were a mass trauma event, which is chapter three of my book now. So I wonder whether, um, the people who were most able to see through it were those who had been through trauma or emotional abuse, um, at some previous point in their life, and at some deep level recognize the symptoms.

And the third. A theory that I have is perhaps this has to do with spirituality and religion, because what unfolded in 2020 was very dark and really evil. I mean, I had a visceral sense that I was brought face to face with evil in a way that I never had been before in my life. You know, when looking around and you see these reports of children being made to wear masks, you know, for like eight hours a day in, in school or whatever, and, you know, the attempt to, to to, to get this stuff into everybody's arms.

I mean, it was absolutely terrible what happened. And so it could be the case that people who, um, pay more attention to the religious and spiritual aspects of their lives, uh, again, may have been more able to, to see through it, but I, I don't know for sure. I I just have different ideas about it.

Yeah, no, that, um, um.

I, I've been, uh, to several hypnotists in my life. You know, there are some showmen who tried to put me under with other people. And, um, and I went to, uh, I went to a couple of sessions with a hypnotherapist and that they couldn't put me under at all. Uh, but that was back when I was an atheist. But now, uh, as a Christian, uh, seeing, seeing prophecy fulfilled right before our eyes at such a rate, uh, there can be no doubt that this is a battle between good and evil.

There is no doubt. And I think we have to confront that for what it is, because we're all looking for the enemies hiding in the shadow. There is only really one enemy, and that's the enemy of souls. And, and, uh, he's the puppet master and everything that's happening underneath him is just diabolical. But, um, can you give, can you give our audience an example of some of the psychologic, of, of the, the impact of some of the psychological operations you're talking about on everyday people like Australians, for example.

I mean, you only have to look at the, um, rise in the suicide rates in 2020. And again, this, this is documented in the official data to see how serious this was. Um, you only have to think about the levels of stress that were deliberately created across entire societies. Um, de Rancors work is quite a good place to, to start on, on this.

And of course, stress doesn't only have psychologically debilitating effects, but it has physical effects too. And again, you can go back to the literature on torture as I do in my book and, and look at, you know, what Amnesty International, for example, had to say about the, um, torture programs in Latin America in the 1970s.

And these techniques are, are by design. They're deliberate, they're designed to, to break people down, um, so that they lose the will to resist. That's fundamentally what it's all about. Um, and so the, the, the second half of the title of my COVID book, COVID-19 Psychological Operations and the War for Technocracy, I've referred to the military dimension already, but I believe that this is war and historically psychological warfare is the prelude for the main event, so to speak.

And so you have to understand the nature of the war. And in my opinion, this is an attempt to completely refashion the global political economy so that the previous paradigms of rule be they liberal democracy, uh, fiat currencies, neoliberal economics, uh, use of mass propaganda, et cetera, all of these things.

Seemed to be waning in efficacy, or at least they did in the years leading up to 2020. And I think what they're trying to do now is to bring in an entirely new system, global Technocracy, which is a totalitarian control system that allows the few to control the many using digital technologies. Now, of course, a global population of 8 billion people is never gonna buy that.

If they can see it for what it is, there'll be mass resistance. And so you have to go to war against them in order to force this on them, essentially. And the effects of the lockdowns, the masks, the injections, and, and various other forms of psychological operations in 2020 and 2021 were to confuse Disorientate, debilitate, demoralize entire populations so that they wouldn't have a clue what was really going on.

Even if they did start to see it, they'd feel powerless and unable to resist. And unfortunately you have to say that those psychological operations were, were largely successful because yes, there has been resistance to the measures, but still today I think that the majority of the population still doesn't see what's happening.

And, and, and, and still there needs to be a, a lot more resistance quickly.

Mm-hmm. Do, do you think they've missed, uh, an opportunity to really put their foot on the accelerator there though? David, do you, do you, I mean, I, I agree. I think it was largely successful, but was it successful enough? Do you think that, you know, they haven't really landed the killer blow and, and there's too many people that are, uh, awake up to what's going on?

Yes, I do think that, and to come back to our previous point about. How a lot of this has become much more obvious now. I think that the situation is starting to spin out of control slowly but surely they're making this big move and in so doing, they themselves are deliberately undermining and dismantling the previous systems, um, including democracy.

Um, I mean, the hollowing out of democratic institutions has been going on for, for some time now, but I think now they're deliberately trying to undermine democracy so as to be able to make the argument, well, wouldn't it be wonderful if we could have ai, um, take decisions, uh, political decisions? Wouldn't that be better than the, uh, the, the problems that we, um, currently have?

And so if they're doing that, but the new system isn't yet implemented, they're trying to implement it in all kinds of ways. Then we're in a period of, of what I call interregnum. Um, there is no kind of paradigm of control, which is completely effective at the moment. And I think even though everything that happened in 2020 must, in my opinion, have been planned for many years, um, if not decades, um, it was so, so coordinated, so ferocious, so malevolent.

Um, it, it didn't happen by accident. Despite that the rollout of the psychological operations and of, of the shots and so on was in some ways rushed and botched. And there were mistakes. And some of the narratives became so self-evidently absurd, particularly in terms of the vaccine rollouts towards the later stages, uh, that they simply couldn't fly.

Um. I don't think that they've managed to get as far of this as they would've liked. Um, I remember back in December, 2021, I was so worried because in the UK the shots had been mandated for care home workers and it was said that in April they would be mandated for NHS workers. I think the NHS is the fifth largest employer in the world.

I thought what a precedent that would set. And I was aware that in other countries this was even worse, um, in terms of these shots being forced on people, particularly in, in North America. And I thought, this is just absolute dystopia. And I was so worried for 2022. And then all of a sudden in January, 2022, we had the Canadian truckers convoy perhaps that had something to do with it, with physical mass protest all across Canada as the convoy passed through.

For whatever reason, all of a sudden the COVID narrative was wound down and then it was just Ukraine, Ukraine, Ukraine. And that to me was a signal that they had pushed that as far as they could go for the time being. And I don't think it was as far as they, they would've liked. I mean, ideally, of course, they would've been able to inject everybody.

So it's a precarious situation that we're now in. Um, and I think it could go any which way.

Mm-hmm. At the same time, the, uh, Canadians were doing the truckers uh, protest, the photo behind John is a photo of the largest rally in Australian history, which happened coincidentally around the same time was the convoy of Canberra.

Um, there have been lots of guesses at the numbers, and I don't even wanna get into the numbers other than I think it's fair to say it definitely was the largest rally in Australian history and the building behind John the white building there is our Parliament house and. Even though that crowd were hanging around for almost three weeks, the politicians paid no attention to them whatsoever.

None whatsoever.

Yeah. So, and this is a, this is a common theme, trans nationally, um, in the uk, um, there were multiple e petitions to the government. And if an e petition passes a hundred thousand signatures, then there has to be a debate in parliament, and you might expect some serious consideration by the government.

Um, and over half a dozen times, these petitions were raised successfully against lockdowns, against masks, against injections, et cetera. And all that would happen. There was no serious debate in parliament. All that would happen is that maybe half a dozen, a dozen mps would meet in a room, they'd have a chat for an hour, no substantive issues would be addressed, and then the government would simply reassert its position.

And this has continued right the way through to the present. Uh, two and three quarter million people in the uk. Uh, two months ago signed a petition against Digital id. That's 4% of the population, including children. This is a major signal to the government that it should be paying attention. That digital ID is not wanted.

I don't think there even was a debate this time. It was just ignored. The government said, well, sorry, we're gonna do it anyway. Um, so we've, again, this is part of the, the, the, the scale of the situation that we've reached now is that governments are in open defiance of their own people. And what was so disturbing about COVID is that governments trans nationally, essentially went to war with their own populations.

I mean, psychological operations are a form of psychological warfare, whatever was in the shots. I mean, this was a military operation.

Yeah.

Um, and it's not just me saying that, you know, you can look at SPO and Catherine Watt and Debbie Luhrman and others, you know, there, there's, there's a substantial body of evidence that this wasn't really a public health crisis.

This was a military operation. And when you see it through those terms. You realize we've got a major problem here historically because it means that the social contract is broken and the social contract is an idea which has been at the heart of Western policies for centuries. And so if that's broken and if governments are actively attacking their own people, you can see how we are on the point of radical change in one direction or another.

And I dunno which direction that will be, but the status quo is not tenable.

Mm. You seem very, um, fortunate over there to have someone like Nigel Ferra that that is gluing people together, uh, which is completely opposite to what's going on here in some respects because the, the people who are fighting against all this are fragmented.

Um, so, so we're finding it very difficult to get any traction. Um, and you've had a couple of really key. Uh, people, uh, being very solid from day, day one over there in Dr. Oltra. And, uh, people like, uh, professor Angus Al Gle, who, who from a clinical standpoint have, have created doubt in the minds of people in relation to these, uh, vaccines, uh, that hasn't happened here, other than those guys actually talking here.

Um, how important do you think that that has been, um, to where the UK finds itself now with, with people, really seems to be an uprising over there as, as, as to, uh, uh, you know, getting rid of the Prime Minister and, and, and, uh, maybe moving forward in a good way.

I'm very skeptical. Um. Personally towards everything that you've just said.

I don't think that Farage offers any kind of solution. Um, I think that it's evident now that the entire political class has failed. The people, uh, Farage, of course, is, um, friendly with Donald Trump. Uh, I don't think that Trump is a savior figure either. I don't think that he's a good actor either. I think that he has been, um, instrumental in the rolling out of, uh, technocracy in the United States in 2025, uh, inviting Palantir into the heart of government.

Um, putting all of this, um, data about the citizenry into the Palantir drives, giving Palantir contracts across multiple government agencies. I think there are various attempts to, uh. Convince the population, the public, that democracy is still working in some fundamental sense. So even if you have lost hope in the two major political parties, well, hey, there's, there's always reform, right?

I mean, reform One had great success in the, in the local elections in the uk, uh, last year. Um, but for me, this is all a husk, a ard, an illusion. Democracy in any fundamental sense is dead. Um, the, this kind of theater show persists as it must because the population must still believe. That it lives in a, a democracy in some meaningful sense.

Otherwise there will be uprising and potential revolution. So they have to keep this show going. And now that it's pretty obvious in every country that the two major parties are really just a uni party. They, they serve the same interests, the same powers. Um, the whole left right dichotomy has been seriously called into question.

Well now they've just taken it to a, a new level and you have the rise of Farage and these kind of so-called alternative parties. But again, they're just there to, to, to hoover up, um, dissidents and, uh, people who are dissatisfied with what's happening, but still can't see that the scale of the problem.

They still don't realize that democracy is being taken apart. So my position is somewhat more skeptical.

Well, the, what what we're witnessing is a global gelian dialectic, isn't it? It's a classic gelian dialectic where there seems to be opposing forces, but they all seem to be in the same bed or dining at the same table and working towards the same commonly wanted solutions.

Is that how you see it?

Absolutely. Um, the, the, the power structure behind this is, is what I call the transnational deep state. And in Wall Street, the Nazis and the crimes of the deep state. I trace the origins and development of that entity, um, from the United States, uh, in particular in the 1940s all the way through to the present.

And what I argue is that over time it's become increasingly transnational and now is effectively global at a basic level. All governments now, all states are on the same page, and the reason for this in large measure has to do with globalization. As the forces of resistance of, of increasingly trans nationalized and become global over the decades.

So the different ruling classes of the world have realized that they can't survive simply within their own kind of bounded territories, their own sovereign nations, so to speak. Um, they have increasingly to band together and work with one another to keep the, um, the international working and middle classes in check.

And so we've seen a gradual development over the course of, of many decades, um, towards a more globalized system whereby, first of all, we saw regional organizations after World War, uh, two, we've seen, um, bodies like, uh, the UN and and, and the WHO and, and others. And then from the 1970s that the World Economic Forum, the Trilateral Commission, um, and others.

But we seem to have reached a situation today where. What was once called global governance is now being replaced by open calls for global government. And I think that this has been the goal for many decades. You can go back to the end of World War ii and the birth of nuclear weapons was being used as the pretext to call for for global government.

You know, the idea was at the time, if you have a World War II involving nuclear weapons, it will be the end for everybody allegedly. Um, and therefore the only safe way forward is, is a world government. Um, these calls have been around for a long time, but today we can see it starting openly to form. So at the beginning of this year, 2025, uh, a new organization was formed by the World Economic Forum called the Global Government Technology Center.

Um, and this is being used to push the idea of digital states all across the world. And also this year, um, the Ukrainian digital state, uh, was announced around the time of the formation of this, uh, global government technology center. And it's being sold as the model for all of the countries to emulate.

And you can look in country after country, and they all have, um, these so-called digital transformation agencies. Um, or similar wording. Um, and the push now is to digitize government and hand it over to ai. Uh, as far as possible, this, again, is the dismantling of democracy. This is the building of, of, um, dictatorship by, by algorithm.

Um, it's, it's very troubling that, that people don't see, uh, what's happening. Um, because if this is allowed to go forwards, then what we will see eventually is indeed the building of a single global government, um, which will operate according to what the bank for international settlements called, uh, calls a unified global ledger.

In other words, all the data from all the different countries about everyone and everything will be put on a single ledger. And that means centralization and centralized control on a global level because whoever has access to all of that data, and we're talking here about the technocrats, whoever can manipulate the algorithms, whoever knows all of this stuff.

They have total control over everybody. So that is now what they are trying to build. And it might look as though different things are happening in different countries. We have, you know, stable coins, for example, in, in the United States, central Bank digital currencies elsewhere. Digital currencies in different countries might appear to operate on different ledgers, but the key term is interoperability.

Because provided all of these different things are interoperable, then ultimately they form a single global system, and that is the global technocracy, uh, that they are striving for.

You talk about, uh, you've talked about, uh, psychological operations being a precursor to war. Um, do you see, I mean, I'm, I'm talking to people in the know, in the UK for example, who are seeing a ramping up of, uh, military exercises over there.

The, uh, military, the Air Force are flying. Constantly every day. Uh, in the town of Norwich, there's a large presence of Swedish military, uh, which a lot of people are wondering about. What's all that about? And it seems like, uh, NATO with, with the Brits and, um, and the nations of Europe want a war with Putin.

It's like they're posturing for a war. Um, and there are some thoughts that perhaps something like a dirty bomb will be let off in, in Russia somewhere to get Putin to fire the, the major shot. Are you seeing these sorts of trends and are they alarming you?

Well, um, I think it goes far beyond that. Um, so when we're dealing with war, and again, the purpose of this war is transformation on a global scale.

Historically, the only times when that has been possible is through World War. So what I argue is that we are already living through World War ii. And that this effectively began in 2020. However, world War II looked nothing like World War I, world War. I looked nothing like anything that had come before.

And in my opinion, world War III looks nothing like World War ii. And so we need to get beyond just thinking about nation state versus nation state, um, fighter jets, um, maneuvers in the sky, uh, conventional weaponry, bullets and tanks and and and so on, because it's not that kind of a war fundamentally, it's a global class war.

It's a war that's being waged by the few against the many. It's a war that's being waged by the transnational ruling class through its control over the means of production. For example, it it, it prints the money, it controls the media, uh, it manufactures the weapons, uh, et cetera. All of that power is now being deployed against the people.

Against populations, uh, trans nationally. And so this form of warfare is something new and historically unprecedented. And I describe it as an omni war because if you're gonna fight against entire populations, you need to be able to subdue them in every way possible. So I think that this new form of warfare is being waged across every domain of human existence simultaneously, but by stealth as far as possible so that people don't know what's happening.

So for example, you might look at, uh, inflation, um, and the, the, the rise in the cost of living in country after country. And of course they, they make up all kinds of, uh, excuses and pretext for why this is happening. But the bottom line is it makes life just harder and, and more difficult, um, for everybody.

Um, all of the programming, uh, that we see, uh, coming through, uh, the media and through, um, mainstream cultural production, uh, again, is designed to, um, manipulate thoughts. Um, the problems with migration that country, after country, after country has been experiencing particularly since 2022, um, in my opinion is, is not by, uh, accident.

It's, it's by design. Um, you know, it, it it's designed to have socially, uh, destabilizing effects. Um, and in my report that I wrote for, um, Katherine Austin Fitz's, uh, Soleri Report, um, I produced a 22,000 word report called Omni War Exposing and Ending the Invisible War Against Humanity. And in that report, I go through all of the different aspects of how the omni war is being waged across all of these different domains.

And it's evil genius really, because people don't notice it, even though it's everywhere. It's almost like the oxygen that you breathe, you're breathing it all the time. It's everywhere. It's all around you. Yeah. But you don't really notice it. Uh, you just kind of live in it. Um, and this, I think is, is what's happening.

Um, and so the situation is, is being made harder for everybody in, in all kinds of ways. And again, the ultimate purpose of this is that people will, will submit when the time comes to technocracy. So should they manufacture a new financial crisis, for example, it could well be used to roll out, um, universal basic income.

And the universal basic income will only be awarded if you submit to the digital id, the social credit scoring and all of the rest of it. So in terms of these, um, tensions with Russia, um, I don't deny that there are, you know, there are geopolitical realities here, but for me, you always have to frame them against the overall context of the omni war.

So what are these tensions really about? They could well be about what they have been about since the Cold War, um, which is not just foreign policy terms, but actually having effects on domestic populations. So back in the 1950s, for example, um, you know, if you can scare the entire US population. That, um, the USSR might drop nuclear weapons on it at any moment.

It keeps the population in a state of fear, and again, this is key to the psychological operations. Now, what was the war on Terror? Uh, premised on fear that terrorists could strike anywhere, anytime. COVID, the TED Leave virus so-called could get you at any moment, any time. So they're very, very useful for maintaining the fear levels, which keeps the population more, um, compliant and subservient.

And as I argue at the end of my COVID book, it may even be the case that they might, they might drop a nuclear weapon or two. I mean, imagine the, the effects that that would have worldwide on, on, on the psyche of populations. However, the key point that I make is, does that mean that World War III is about to erupt in the sense that I described from the 1950s earlier?

Does that mean there's gonna be nuclear wet weapons going off all over the world and you know, we're gonna witness this kind of nuclear holocaust? No, I don't think it does. If such a thing were to happen, I think it would be part of yet another psychological operation, which will be used as a pretext for saying we must do X, Y, and z uh, in order to prevent nuclear war.

So again, the picture goes much, much bigger, I think, than it might first appear.

Yeah, Johnny? So, so it sounds, uh, David, from what you're saying, that one of the key aspects to fighting this World War III that we're obviously in I is, is making people aware, uh, that we're in one. Uh, so things like your 22,000 word, uh, report, uh, need to be freely available and, and, and I suppose, uh, made, made into, uh, something that is able to be, uh, understood by, by the public, uh, rather than.

You know, I can imagine a 22,000 page report is not something that the average punter will, uh, will sit down to read. So how do we do that?

You've done a documentary, haven't you, David?

Yes. Um, I was, I was part of, um, the Oracle films. Um, uh, it was called, um, the Agenda, um, their Vision, your Future, um, uh, a critique of the 2030, uh, agenda.

Um, I and many others were, were involved, uh, in that. So we're, we're doing what we can to get the word out. Um, that report, um, Solari has a, a, a, a policy of keeping it pay walled for 12 months, but it came out in January, so next month, again, that I can make that freely, uh, available. And yes, it's a lot of words, but I've gotta be honest, the Solari team did a wonderful job with the graphics and the aesthetics.

I mean, it's, it is a beautiful, uh, beautifully presented report. Um, and I think it is quite easy to read in many ways 'cause of the ways it's structured and the ways it's, it's presented. So yeah, we'll definitely get that out there, um, for free next month. And, uh, I would encourage people to, uh. To take a look at it, but you're quite right.

It's the awareness is key because at the heart of this war is deception. As soon as the population realizes what is happening, what is being done, how it is being done, and why, there is sure to be enormous, enormous resistance. But at the moment, many people go around completely oblivious to what is happening.

I, I have a section in that report, uh, called A Day in the Life, and it's just one page, um, about a, a a hypothetical kind of Joe Blogs who's just going about his ordinary day and there are all these signs of the omni war taking place all around him, but he just doesn't realize it because it just seems like normal life to him.

So that was my attempt to, to show people how this is being done.

Boy, aren't we seeing that? It'd be great to, yeah, we we're just seeing that everywhere in Australia at the moment and indeed around the world, people just seem to. They know something's going on. You can tell because a lot of people are coming to Christ.

There's a lot of people wanting faith. Now, I'm not talking about religion because religion's a big part of this problem that you are discussing. Uh, religion, corporatized religion is right in the heart of this stuff. It's used to manipulate people as well. I'm talking about people having a relationship with Christ.

There's such an increase. Um, I myself have baptized 350 people in the last couple of years. People who want to, you know, I've had atheists come up to me and say, look, I, I don't believe in God, but can you pray for me? I mean, there's some, there's a sense of urgency around people at the moment. Um, I'm, I'm thinking if, if you've got time, we can break this into two.

I'd like to, um, I'd like to, uh, have we got you for a little bit longer yet.

Yes. I'm not under any time constraints. Yeah.

Great. I I would like to, I'd like to do that. So we'll make this a two part presentation, I think, because Yeah, no problem. We're only scratching the surface. Um, before we go to part two, I just wanna ask you, do you see any geopolitical players at the moment who are a thorn in the side of the new world order, like Putin or Xi Jinping?

Do you see them as part of the system or do you think they're actively working against it?

They're 100% part of the system. This is a global, um, operation that we're looking at. And the, the, the, the mission is from their perspective to roll out technocracy globally. Now, of course, this originates in China.

Um, with Rockefeller funding, mind you. But, uh, China, you know, is what Ian Davis has described as the world's first technique. So when we're talking about, um, social credit scoring, for example, you know, China, I mean, as Patrick Woods books, uh, make very clear, um, all of this was being implemented in China, even pre COVID.

Um, so the idea that China would somehow be opposed to the new world order is laughable. Um, similarly, if you look at, um, uh, what's his name, Riley Wman. Um, and I mean, he used to live in Russia. Uh, he saw firsthand what was happening. Um, and he describes how essentially yes, you have cultural differences and so on, superficial differences, but the same things are happening in Russia.

Um, you know, you, you had the, the Sputnik vaccine, for example, in Russia, um, while we had, you know, Moderna and AstraZeneca and Pfizer and others, um. Uh, uh, across the west, but they still went for the, the rollout. They're still going for the, the digital currencies. All governments, all states are on board with the same technocratic agenda.

Now, what we're seeing in the so-called alternative media, um, is an attempt to present figures like Putin as some kind of white knight who's gonna come in and save us. You know, it's just another version of kind of like Trumpers savior or whoever, um, or attempts to praise these regimes because, you know, we all know how bad the West is.

We all know that, you know, the, uh, uh, the, the, the British and American ruling class in particular, uh, were responsible for financing the rise of Hitler and the, the Nazi war machine. We all know about the various war crimes that have been committed under Anglo-American foreign policy. However, you know, it's one thing to call those things out.

Is that then a pretext to start praising. Russia and, and China, I don't think it is. But we've seen a disturbing trend in, in recent months where various commentators in the alt media have accepted paid trips to Russia and China, and have then returned to write about how wonderful they are. I find this a very disturbing development.

It's, um, it's, it's, it's helping to usher in that very technocratic order that they claim to oppose. So, no, I'm afraid. I, I don't see any, any hope in any government at this stage.

I, I'm gonna touch on a really sensitive topic at the moment because, um, I think it's deliberately designed to be, uh, controversial and I'm talking about geopolitical Israel.

I'm not talking about spiritual Israel, geopolitical Israel, and I want to preface what I'm saying with the knowledge that statistically, uh, geopolitical Israel is one of the most secular countries in the world. I'm not talking about the faith here of the Jewish people. I'm talking about the nation Zionism connected with geopolitical Israel.

Is that a major player in this as well?

Well, it has to be, doesn't it? Um, and when you look at what is going on in Palestine, particularly since the October 7th attacks, regardless of what really took place or who was responsible there, um, but I mean, the UN itself has described it as genocide. Um, and when you look at the footage of Palestine since then, I mean, it's just, I can't, I don't even have words to describe it.

I mean, it's, it's, it's the most sickening and appalling thing I've ever seen in my life. Um, now the point about this, the, the, the broader significance, um, that I've argued in my work is that the West is doing nothing to stop this. In fact, it's completely 100% behind it. Yeah. Um, when Rishi Schack was, uh, prime Minister in the uk, he came out and basically said that we're gonna stand with Israel forever.

And similar noises were coming out of the United States and, and elsewhere. And I thought, why on earth would you say something like that? And so again, when we're thinking about, you know, the parallels and continuities with the Nazi past and, you know, talking genocide, well, the whole idea after 1945 was never again.

Right. Never again. And then there were all the problems with Western inaction, if not deliberate complicity with the Ruanda genocide in the 1990s. Now it's clearly happening. In fact, it's being live streamed. So, you know, they, they say it's the first time a genin genocide has been live streamed from, you know, from, from inside because of camera phones and, and so on.

The evidence is there for the whole global population to see. Of course, much of it is censored as, as far as possible, but, you know, for anyone who's willing to look, it's there and the West is directly implicated in it and doing absolutely nothing to stop it. Um, meanwhile you have the various, um, facial recognition technologies, uh, autonomous drones, uh, and so on.

Uh, digital checkpoints all being used against the Palestinians. Um, Anthony Levenstein in, in his book, uh, describes Palestine as a laboratory, you know, a test site essentially for this new, uh, digital weaponry. Um, and. What I've argued is that Palestine really is an indicator for what awaits the rest of us if we don't take action and, and speak up on this topic.

Because those same digital technologies and digital weapons under a global technocracy will come for all of us. Um, you know, dissident opinion will not be allowed, and there are various ways of switching people off all the way from censorship, uh, through to, uh, autonomous drones and, and murder. And this, again, has a long history, uh, using information for killing purposes.

You know, the systematization of the Holocaust through IBM, um, the use of information gathering to identify key leaders, uh, in the Indonesian coup in 1965 or in Operation Phoenix in 1968. The use of information to identify key, uh, terrorist cells in, in the war on terror. Um, in the same way as kind of marketeers, uh, use those kind of spider diagrams to see who the key influencers are.

Same principles being used to identify key terrorists. And now the war on terror is effectively coming home to Western populations. And we're all being treated like criminals. Everybody has to provide fingerprints, you know, when they enter a different country. Um, you know, it's, it's getting really bad.

Everybody is, is under suspicion. It's increasingly a zero trust society. And so if you see how all of this fits together, then. Yeah, what's happening in Palestine should be a massive warning signal, um, for everybody else, uh, across the rest of the world. The Zionist angle, of course, is, is deeply, um, troubling.

Um, professor, um, David Miller in the uk, uh, one, a legal case, establishing his right to hold the philosophical belief, uh, that Zionism is a race ra, racist and genocidal, uh, ideology. So the right to hold that opinion in the UK has legally been, uh, established. Um, and it is a mystery. Is it not why Benjamin Netanyahu was able to get more standing ovations, uh, in the US Senate than, uh, Barack Obama was?

How does that work? How is it possible for a small middle Eastern country with a population of 8 million, uh, apparently. To be able to exercise control over us and British, uh, politics. You look at the influence of apac, uh, in the United States, and all of the politicians seem to be at its beck and call.

If you look at, um, the, uh, conservative friends of Israel and the labor friends of Israel in the uk, you find exactly the same thing. And so somehow, and I'm not a hundred percent sure how this works, perhaps it was through the, the promise software that, uh, Israel developed, uh, in order to, um, gain backdoor access, uh, on uh, uh, influential people and potentially bribe and blackmail and so on, the key figures.

But somehow this, this state, which of course. In the 1950s with the ER gun, you know, clear kind of, um, terrorist, uh, influences there appears to have been able to manipulate Western foreign policy to an unfathomable degree. Um, there are those who suspect Israel's role in nine 11. I dunno if that can be demonstrated necessarily from the events on the day.

But what we do know is kui Bono who benefits and us aggression against a, a series of Muslim majority countries surrounding Israel clearly benefits Israel. And so this is coming more and more to the fore now. And of course, they've been very successful. Through their weaponization of antisemitism, you know, no criticism of Israel or else you're an anti-Semite.

Well, thankfully that narrative is also starting to fall apart now, but I think you're right that, um, you know, this Israeli state as you put it, and particularly the, the Zionist influences within it really need to be put under the microscope now because there's something very, very dark coming from there.

Wow. This is, uh, this is a, an, an intriguing interview. It's an enthralling interview. Uh, David, thank you for waiting on because, uh, we really only just touched on your first book and I really want to get into the second one with you. Um, so look, thank you for being with us. Uh, stay on a course because we're gonna record part two of this straight away, but, um, I, I think I need to pray now and we'll pray at the end of the second one as well.

Alright,

dear. Dear Lord, father in heaven, we are confronted with a battle between good and evil. There is no doubt, Lord, that that is happening and. The only way through this is for people to be shown the light of truth through the light that you provide us, father God, a light of compassion, love, grace, and mercy.

So help us to open up our minds, open our eyes and see it for what it really is. Lord, we thank you for our guest tonight, and we ask you to watch over him and to keep him safe as well, because we do this in Jesus' name. Amen.

Right?

Amen. Johnny Lader, you've often been heard to say you just couldn't make this stuff up.

You couldn't make this stuff up. Uh, everyone just hang around because this really is you couldn't make this stuff up. Hang around and, uh, we'll bring you part two of this episode in a couple of days time. Thanks for watching Club Gruy. Bye for now.
